

Activate() and Deactivate() methods are for object pooling. When a bullet is activated, it is retrieved from the object pool and positioned for use. When deactivated, it's returned to the object pool for reuse. This pooling behavior manages the creation and destruction of bullet objects, improving performance.